SUPC is a premier international conference for undergraduate psychology students. Our mission is to promote psychological science and the professional development of psychology students by facilitating professional networking and the sharing of high-quality psychology research.

Keynote Speaker:

Dr. Michael C. Frank

Dr. Michael C. Frank is an Assistant Professor of Psychology at Stanford University. He received his PhD from MIT's Department of Brain and Cognitive Sciences in Spring of 2010, after graduating from Stanford with a double major with Honors in Symbolic Systems and Comparative Literature. His research focuses broadly on language acquisition, including computational models of language acquisition, especially word segmentation and word learning, the role of social cognition in language development, and the reciprocal effects of language on cognition, including cross-cultural studies of numerical cognition. He has received numerous awards and honors for his research and teaching, including the Walle Nauta Award for Continued Dedication to Research and Teaching, the Angus MacDonald Award for Excellence in Undergraduate Teaching, and the David Marr Prize for Best Student Paper from the Cognitive Science Society. His work has also been featured in news and TV media including Discover Magazine, the London Telegraph, Babyltalk magazine and more.

Conference Date: Friday, May 20 - Saturday, May 21, 2011

Location: Jordan Hall, Stanford University

SUPC is sponsored in part by the Department of Psychology, Psi Chi, and the School of Humanities and Sciences at Stanford University
